

Occupational Health Programme Update.

Occupational health will also become a key proposition within Health Shield's product offering.

Health Shield's Occupational Health Programme is designed to support employers' legal health and safety obligations. The services also provide employers with the tools to help manage absenteeism issues.

The new occupational health proposition will be marketed from 1st October, however the new offering will not be available until 1st January 2020. Before then, we can talk to prospective clients about this new proposition and continue to sell the existing Occupational Health Programme if a solution is needed before the new year.

Health Shield will for the first time, actively promote Occupational Health Management Referrals. The key differentiation for the product is that referrals can be completed digitally via video call rather than just face-to-face. Employers don't need to be on a retainer with us for this service, meaning it can be purchased on an ad-hoc basis.

There's more information on the new offering on the Health Shield website, or if you have any other questions, the Sales Team will be able to help.

More information will be shared with you later this year before the official launch.
